NIST Diverse Communities Data Excerpts:

Texas Dataset Postcard Descriptions

These PUMA from South and West of Fort Worth Texas include a selection of urban, suburban and rural communities—some communities predate Texas joining the United States. Their economies draw from a wide variety of sectors including agriculture, industry, military, business, and entertainment (museums, theme parks, sports). Railroads, and then highways, have played a major role in how these communities have grown.

Selected Wikipedia Excerpt [2]: In August 1886, the Texas Farmers' Alliance met at Lee's Academy and adopted a 17-point political resolution, commonly known as the Cleburne Demands, which was the first major document of the agrarian revolt occurring at the end of the late 19th century. In 1900, Cleburne was the site of the founding convention of the Texas State Federation of Labor. Cleburne was primarily an agricultural center and county seat until the Santa Fe Railroad opened a major facility there in 1898. During this time, the population boomed, as it became a sizable city for the area with over 12,000 residents by 1920.

The Chicago, Texas and Mexican Central Railway connected Cleburne to Dallas in 1882. Two other railroads had terminals in Cleburne. The Dallas, Cleburne, and Southwestern Railway completed a route to Egan in 1902, and the Trinity and Brazos Valley, nicknamed the Boll Weevil, operated from Cleburne from 1904 to 1924. Cleburne is on the fringe of the Dallas–Fort Worth metroplex. Growth in the area can be primarily attributed to suburbanization.

Selected Wikipedia Excerpt [2]: One possible Native American origin [of the name Waxahatchee] is the Alabama language, originally spoken in the area of Alabama around Waxahatchee Creek by the Alabama-Coushatta people, who had migrated by the 1850s to eastern Texas. In the Alabama language, waakasi hachi means "calf's tail" (the Alabama word waaka being a loan from Spanish vaca).

Employment opportunities in the city are highly oriented toward industry. Owens Corning, Georgia-Pacific, International Paper, James Hardie Industries, Berry Global, Americase, Cardinal Glass, Magnablend, and Dart Container are located within a few miles of each other. Nonindustrial employers include Baylor Scott & White Health, Waxahachie Independent School District, Walgreen Distribution Center, Wal-Mart, HEB Grocery, Navarro College, and Southwestern Assemblies of God University.

Selected Wikipedia Excerpt [2]: Saginaw is a small city in Tarrant County, Texas, United States, and an Inner suburb of Fort Worth. Saginaw has two major railroad lines (one operated by Union Pacific and another by BNSF) running through the middle of the city, Railserved heavy industry is located along these lines. Saginaw has a prominent heavy industrial base when compared to other suburban cities of the same size. Saginaw is known for its "Train & Grain" heritage, due to the presence of the railroads and two large flour mills located within the city limits. Large grain elevators (visible from miles away) are a prominent feature in the center of the city.
